many of your readers—during the war, when great efforts were being made to bring out the 600,000, in an oration which he delivered in Wheeling, we believe, he ran into a personal and political description of the leaders of the Rebellion. Having probably a personal acquaintance, and fully appreciating their ambitious and selfah motives—his asreasm was at times sublime. Yet we thought of that military principle of Napoleon, when advised in furtherance of his ends to free the Bussian serfs—"I might desire to make friends of the Russian government at some future day."

Coming to Benjamin, then one of the rebel cabinet, he threw out his finger—which, backed by his shagged brows, might well represent the finger of scorn—and rolls out a bundle of invective, as a murderer would roll a stone upon the remains of his victim, "and Judah P. Benjamin, that cop-per-col-or-ed Israelite!" We imagined, that no loyal man thanks him for that expression, for it lost its power as hurled at the down trodden Jew.

And of course this would drive every Jsw, closer in sympathy to brother Judah, and rather away from
